Parents are faced with a myriad of issues when choosing a school for their child, with academic, cultural and environmental factors to be taken into consideration to find the best environment to maximize their child’s learning experiences. The key is a school environment which equips students to realize their potential and that will equip them for their future as compassionate, skilled leaders. Academic achievement is an essential element of a child’s schooling however the cultural, sporting and social experiences a child has at school are just as important in their development.

“Children thrive and are ready to meet the challenges of learning and growing when they are in a caring environment, when they are supported, challenged and inspired. For example, at Good Shepherd, we have made it our focus to engage skilled and caring teaching and non-teaching staff who are dedicated to providing an education experience including academic, cultural, sporting and social aspects which bring out the best in our students,” said Anthony Dyer, Principal, Good Shepherd Lutheran College.

The College has a record of academic success enabling students to achieve their maximum potential with Good Shepherd’s NAPLAN testing results consistently at or above national averages. Secondary results are also impressive with students graduating from the College consistently achieving high OP results, for example, 26% of students graduating in 2010 achieved an OP 1-5. These outstanding results demonstrate the academic strengths of the College and the skilled and professional level of teaching the College offers.
